
STUPID!
LOSER!
CYBERBULLYNG bullying online

Cyberbullying is a form of bullying applied on telematic tools such as the internet and it is about forms of violence, blackmail, denigration or offenses, including public ones. cyberbullying has specific characteristics by which it can be recognized. A typical example is anonymity and all the messages that are written on the internet even in a social platform, those who write the offenses justify themselves by thinking that they have only followed the crowd and have "joked"

There are different types of cyberbullying. some examples: flaming, which are vulgar messages present on online groups aimed at offending and denigrating someone. impersonation is someone who pretends to have another identity and talks to people online who are not aware of it, doxing which is the exchange of personal data on the internet or cyberstalking which is the persecution of a person on the internet with persistent threats.

Bullies don't know when to stop and the reasons why they tease kids can be different for example seeking attention from family or peers or the environment in which they are located. Many schools fight for bullying in general to end, and many argue that children need to be educated so that they can stand up for themselves because bullying exists even after school.

by Martha Giardina and Greta Laface